SEMESTER IN WASHINGTON, D.C.

Looking for a career in policymaking or advocacy?

Do you want to make an impact on the national stage?

Let FIU get you there with a one-of-kind semester in Washington, D.C., exclusively for undergraduates enrolled in the Steven J. Green School of International & Public Affairs, in collaboration with the Jack D. Gordon Institute for Public Policy and FIU in Washington, D.C.

Combine your academic knowledge with a hands-on opportunity to develop skills essential to a career in public affairs, policy and advocacy. The program begins in fall 2024 with a noncredit, online course and continues in Washington, D.C., in spring 2025 with in-person classroom sessions at FIU's center on Capitol Hill and a paid internship that FIU will help you secure.

Why a semester in Washington, D.C.?

Washington, D.C. stands as a symbol of American history, democracy and governance. It is the meeting place of the U.S. Congress and the epicenter of federal policymaking. Laws, intelligence decisions, foreign and military affairs, budget appropriations and more fall under the purview of Congress. By studying and interning in D.C., you will dive into an environment where key decisions are made while gaining firsthand experience and insight into the workings of government.

Faculty, government officials, agency heads and other leading experts will be your instructors. The FIU network of alumni and friends will serve as guides as you build your knowledge and plan for your career.

Who should apply: Anyone interested in policy and advocacy to influence government decisions, raise public awareness about important issues and promote the adoption of laws and regulations that benefit society.

Degree-seeking students in the Green School with at least 60 credits and minimum 3.0 GPA is a free, noncredit online course. Learners go at their own pace and earn a credential upon completion.

Developed by the Jack D. Gordon Institute for Public Policy, the course teaches how to interact with policymakers at all levels of government. Learners acquire an understanding of the different levels; which to contact regarding specific issues; how to effectively communicate positions; how to develop relationships with elected officials and staff; and how to advocate for positions and outcomes. This Fall experience will be taught by FIU alumna and former State Senator Anitere Flores.

Micro-Credential Terms:

August 19-September 22
September 30-November 3

Micro-credential meetings:

Wednesdays 5-7 pm
Zoom with Senator Anitere Flores

In addition to this micro-credential, several others are available if you have scheduling conflicts, such as Civic Leadership and Engagement and DC Ready: Fundamentals of Government and Policy for Career Success.

SPRING 2025: Immersive learning in the heart of the nation’s capital

The experience in Washington, D.C. includes three components that offer a comprehensive introduction to policymaking and advocacy at the highest levels.

ACADEMIC COURSES: UP TO TWO IN-PERSON COURSES

PAD 3033 Introduction to Public Administration (3 credits) Provides an overview of the field of public administration by focusing on its development and importance in government operations. Must be taken in first 12 hours of upper-division coursework.

ISS 4385 Effective Governmental Communication (3 credits) Improves communications for governmental professions, enhancing research and effective writing skills, and developing briefing techniques.

PAID INTERNSHIP (potential credit, per your department): A paid internship enables you to apply knowledge and skills gained from the micro-credential as you experience how policy is crafted and implemented, and engage with key stakeholders in real-world settings. FIU’s student support team assists students to identify and apply for internships that align with their interests and connects them with mentors and coaches.

THE TALENT LAB: LEARNING COMMUNITY: The FIU in DC center provides professional development presentations for students and recent graduates. The series enables students to: engage with policymakers across a spectrum of organizations; appreciate why communication is key to successful advocacy; understand how emerging technologies are transforming the career landscape and the skills to stay abreast of advances; recognize the value of seeking multiple perspectives on issues; and understand the value of entrepreneurial thinking, workplace soft skills, networking and goal setting

COST: Students pay FIU tuition and must be enrolled full time. (Full-time enrollment requires that a student take courses that together equal a minimum of 12 credits, inclusive of online courses.) Financial aid applies.

Housing is not provided; students have to seek out housing options. A list of options is provided at washingtondc.fiu.edu.
